The Sands of Mars is a science fiction novel by English writer Arthur C. Clarke. While he was already popular as a short story writer and as a magazine contributor, The Sands of Mars was also a prelude to Clarke's becoming one of the world's foremost writers of science fiction novels. The story was published in 1951, before humans had achieved space flight. It is set principally on the planet Mars, which has been settled by humans and is used essentially as a research establishment. The story se

Arthur C. Clarke shows why he is considered a grand master of science fiction with this fantastic novel. The Sands of Mars is, in my mind, not quite on par with the first novel. This is mainly due to the fact that we have no serious misconceptions about what Mars is like. At the time of wr

The City and the Stars/The Sands of Mars by Arthur C. Clarke

THE SPACE TRILOGY is a collection of three of Arthur C. Clarke's early novels. Long before 2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY (1968) and RENDEZVOUS WITH RAMA (1972), Clarke wrote THE SANDS OF MARS (1951), ISLANDS IN THE SKY (1952) and EARTHLIGHT (1955). Apart from the publishing history of these books, the theme of this collection is the fictionalization of Earth's future space exploration (which was, of course, also a theme of virtually Clarke's entire body of work).
